Traditions

Tradition Seven

No A.A. Tradition had the labor pains this one did by Claire A.

Every A.A. group ought to be fully self-supporting, declining outside contributions.

Reading Tradition Seven again in preparation for writing this piece, I was struck by the idea of the swinging pendulum, and the grandiosity on display among the early founders. From my vantage point I could see their problems, and I could see how I would do the exact same thing. It struck me how money is one of those things that brings out the character defects. I see it in myself. I can get really tied up in knots if I don't have exactly two dollars to put in the basket. Do I put in five? Will I need change? If I take change, how can I make sure everyone sees that I'm not stealing money? Can I bring myself to not take change, giving five dollars because that's nothing compared to the cost of a drink? Will everyone then see how generous I was? What if I give five dollars now, and then nothing at the next meeting? Would the people there look down on me?

The idea of "enough" was really new

What a mess. So, I can see myself in the founders, not knowing what to do with a huge amount of money, arguing over how to handle it, having ridiculous notions of solving all of the world's alcohol problems in one fell swoop. The idea of "enough" was really new for me when I came into A.A. I remember looking around the room and thinking to myself, "You know, if we each gave a little more money, we wouldn't have to meet in this shabby basement, and we could have really good coffee." It took me a while to realize that the priority was not a nice room and good coffee: the priority was carrying the message.

We could have really good coffee ...

Grandiosity can carry over into my life. When I make a mistake, I'm the worst person there ever was, beating myself up for making mistakes, for being—gasp—human. When I have a modest success, I will get the Nobel Prize, don't you know, or at the very least write a bestselling book. "Alcoholics are all-or-nothing people," this tradition says, and it's true. There's no room for contentment when you're swinging on a pendulum, because you're either miserable or manic.

So, when I read "These simple services would require small sums of money which we could and would pay for ourselves," it's like a lightning bolt of simplicity and humility.

This is one of those simple but not easy practices of A.A. We are not asked to pay a lot. We are not required to pay a dime, actually. We are asked to contribute what we can. What will I make of that? Will I freak out (see above)? Or will I reach into my pocket, and give some of what I have? Will I recognize that the point is not that I feel comfortable about what I gave? The point is that I contributed. The point is that when I needed it, A.A. was here, through the countless small contributions, monetary and other wise, of alcoholics before me.

And in the rest of my A.A. practice, will I fold my arms in a huff if I can't be perfect? Or will I strive for a small amount of progress each day, pray for guidance, have a bit of tolerance for that annoying sister, surrender my tiny little will to my higher power that actually is grand—that makes the sun rise and atoms and ice cream and baby giggles and the smell of salt air off the sea?

Step Seven

"Humbly asked Him to remove our shortcomings."

by Charley D.

Step Seven, a mere seven words, ranks as the shortest of the Twelve Steps. That doesn't make it insignificant and certainly doesn't mean it's easy. It starts with humility and ends with shortcomings. If we want to get rid of those shortcomings, we must humbly ask for help. Why humbly? Shortcomings are frustrating, maddening, something I'd rather ignore and forget. Ah, but I tried that with the major manifestation of my shortcomings – my drinking. I remember how well that worked.

For decades, day after miserable day, I'd awaken disgusted with myself and resolve to get my drinking under control. That determination usually didn't last past lunch time, when most days I'd down a couple of glasses of wine, and almost never lasted through the end of the day. Why? Certainly, I was exasperated, frustrated, and disgusted with myself. Why couldn't I change? The short answer – because I wasn't humble. I thought I could do it myself. Too proud and too scared to ask for help, I repeatedly tried and failed to solve my own problem on my own for years. Only when I finally admitted I was powerless over alcohol and asked for help, was I able to stop drinking.

That same process works for our other shortcomings. Step Seven tells us to treat our other shortcomings just as we treated drinking. Whatever it may be, don't try to do it all yourself. The second word of the step, "asked," is the key. To ask is to admit I can't do it myself – the essence of humility. Change, even change for the better, doesn't come easily. Being human, it's hard for me to let go of my familiar ways, even those that don't work. I can't see over the horizon to the better world beyond my shortcomings. I need help to get me past them. For that I must ask my Higher Power. How do I that?

To ask is to admit I can't do it myself - the essence of humility

The answer to that will depend. Let's say you're trying to overcome a tendency to procrastinate. Alcoholics certainly tend to excel at this shortcoming. I certainly do. You can pray to have it removed. That might work. You can ask someone, a sponsor, a friend, maybe even your mother, gently to check on you to be sure you're staying on task and not succumbing to the temptation to do any of the thousand other things that suddenly seem overpoweringly attractive as you try to complete that report for work, that project for school, that article for The Point. The key, for me, is to get someone other than powerless me involved in overcoming the shortcoming. I must ask for that.

We ask for "removal" of our shortcomings. Does that mean they go away? If we're lucky, yes. Again, this will vary from person to person and from shortcoming to shortcoming. We've seen alcoholics start in our programs, relapse time and again, and after many frustrating slips finally achieve sobriety. Others find relief immediately and, from their introduction to our program, never drink again. Neither has any claim to a "better" path to sobriety. Most of the time our shortcomings will be of the relapsing variety. Procrastination certainly is for me. I can see once I've finally tackled the task that had driven me to procrastinate that it's almost always easier than I thought. I feel immensely better once I've done it.

I'm still trying

When I'm procrastinating, I feel terrible. I don't enjoy the diversions I've chosen. Does all this stop me from procrastinating next time I face a disagreeable or difficult task? Not so far. But I'm still trying. So it is with most shortcomings. We try. We ask for help. We find relief. We fail. We start again.

The temptation here is to imagine that we had good motives and reasons
 when we really didn't.
 ~12 and 12, Step Ten

Continue to watch for selfishness, dishonesty, resentment, and fear. When these crop up, we ask God at once to remove them. We discuss them with someone immediately and make amends quickly if we have harmed anyone. Then we resolutely turn our thoughts to someone we can help. Love and tolerance of others is our code. HELP WANTED

Ready to get involved in A.A.?

A.A. members work together to help the alcoholic who still suffers. Helping each other is a key to staying sober. There are many opportunities to participate in a variety of ways. The best place to start getting involved is through an A.A. group. Participating in a group helps ensure that when a person reaches out for help, A.A. will be available.

Tradition Seven: Every AA group ought to be fully self-supporting, declining outside contributions.

- Honestly now, do I do all I can to help AA (my group, my central office, my GSO) remain self-supporting? Could I put a little more into the basket on behalf of the new guy who can't afford it yet? How generous was I when tanked in a barroom?
- Should the Grapevine sell advertising space to book publishers and drug companies, so it could make a big profit and become a bigger magazine, in full color, at a cheaper price per copy?
- If GSO runs short of funds some year, wouldn't it be okay to let the government subsidize AA groups in hospitals and prisons?
- Is it more important to get a big AA collection from a few people, or a smaller collection in which more members participate?
- Is a group treasurer's report unimportant AA business? How does the treasurer feel about it?
- How important in my recovery is the feeling of self-respect, rather than the feeling of being always under obligation for charity received?

Now you can contribute via Venmo If for a Group, please put Group name in Note section... Thank You !!!

Concept VII: The Charter and Bylaws of the General Service Board are legal instruments, empowering the trustees to manage and conduct world service affairs. The Conference Charter is not a legal document; it relies upon tradition and the A.A. purse for final effectiveness.

- Do we act responsibly regarding the "power of the purse"?
- Do we realize that the practical and spiritual power of the Conference will nearly always be superior to the legal 7th tradition self-support contribution

Bill W. wrote of Intergroup Offices, "Though not costly, these agencies are absolutely essential to our continued expansion—to our survival as a Fellowship. Their costs are a collective obligation that rests squarely upon all of us. Our support of services actually amounts to a recognition on our part that AA. must everywhere function in full strength—and that, under our Tradition of self-support, we are all going to foot the bill"
